Sam Ehlinger scores 5 TDs enroute to stunning victory

Sam Ehlinger, who passed for 314 yards and two touchdowns against OU. Despite his passing prowess, it was Ehlinger's ability to gain chunks of yards on designed running plays that put the Longhorns over the top.

Ehlinger is a straight-ahead power runner. He doesn't dazzle with his feet. He's a slobber-knocker, old-school football player who would rather try to run over a linebacker than run out of bounds, even if it's to his physical detriment. Don't forget that a year ago Oklahoma's defense busted up Ehlinger really good and sent him to the sideline as he tried to remember his name and what day it was.

To his credit, Ehlinger has a short memory. The second time around against the hated Sooners, Ehlinger rushed 19 times for 72 yards and three touchdowns in the biggest game of his life and converted a third-and-3 on the Longhorns' final drive that set up the game-winning field goal.

Simply put, Ehlinger is the quarterback that Longhorn Nation has been pining for since Colt McCoy. What is more, he's as responsible as anyone for getting former Oklahoma defensive coordinator Mike Stoops fired after the game.

Defensively, Texas gave Oklahoma all that it could handle until the Sooners' fourth-quarter offensive explosion. Longhorns defensive coordinator Todd Orlando continues to enhance his already impressive resume with a plethora of exotic defenses, but give the devil his due. OU's offense is as good as there is in big-time college football. For three quarters, Orlando's unit held their own against the Sooners. As a result, Orlando might not be long for Austin. He'll likely get his chance to become a head coach sooner rather than later. Then we might find out how good of a coach that Herman really is.
